

O, Times! O, Manners!: Handbook and Cadet Regulations for St. Johns Military School

St. Johns Military Schools Etiquette and Cadet Regulations Handbook first developed by Herbert Ernest Nuss, School Master, in 1957. It describes the schools college preparatory curriculum and the making of young gentlemen -- a day in the life of a St. Johns Military School cadet. It is often a privilege to attend boarding school where less than 35,000 out of 17 million US students attend annually and tuition can run up to $34,000 a year. Whether they have gone to boarding school or not, most high school students have learned about boarding schools through books like A Catcher in the Rye, A Separate Peace and Missing the Piano, watched films like Goodbye, Mr. Chips or Taps; and maybe have met someone or someones parents who had gone to boarding school. American boarding schools can provide a combination of rural bucolic setting with proximity to major cities - the safety and reduced distractions of a rural setting combined with proximity to a large urban center. Boarding School types abound - Boys, Girls, Coed, Religious Affiliation, Military, all Highly Competitive, nurturing and growth oriented. Unlike typical boarding schools, which copied the British Public School model (e.g., 6th Form and Prefects), Military Schools are modeled after West Point. Many were created in the nineteenth century, most after the Civil War, and are among the oldest boarding schools in the country. These schools are unique in America and prevalent in the South and the Midwest carrying the idealized Christian values of the Officer and a Gentleman into the modern world -- The concepts of honor, character, integrity, tradition, duty, responsibility and service live in the teachings and traditions at many of these military academies. In the American way of thinking, these values, often associated with the military, should be the qualities expected of any solid citizen in our American democracy. A Gentleman is not so much born as made. What makes the Gentleman at St. Johns are the values it instills in its pupils -- honor, character, civility, compassion, courtesy, ethics, loyalty, manners, duty, and service. A Gentleman lives by a Code of Honor - a Gentleman will not lie, cheat, steal or tolerate those who do (Cadet Honor Code). A Gentleman is athletic as in mens sana in corpore sano, and says well played at the end of a match even when he loses. A Gentleman is both a man of action and a man of letters. A young gentleman is a St. Johns cadet! This handbook describes the education of young gentlemen preparing for college and life.
